  - $128,764 to and Catholic Charities/Wilson Fish
- CDSS Disaster Services Bureau (DSB) reached out to its feeding partners, Southern Baptist Disaster Relief and The Salvation Army. Both organizations have the capacity for providing feeding services. However, if services are requested, funding will need to be coordinated.
- DSB has made several attempts to contact the San Diego Food banks to find out if they are able to provide food for feeding operations, however there has been no response to date.

WEATHER SYNOPSIS BY REGION

NORTHERN CALIFORNIA

A low pressure trough is deepening offshore. This trough will be the dominant weather feature through early next week. Afternoon temperatures will be near normal today, and southwest winds will increase today, especially over the higher terrain and east of the Cascade-Sierra crest where gusts may reach 30 mph. As the trough strengthens offshore on Friday southwest winds will continue to increase. Southwesterly gusts along and east of the Cascade-Sierra crest will reach 40 mph and locally higher Friday, and 30 mph on Saturday. Humidity will be 15-30% there each afternoon. Friday is considered the only High Risk day due to the stronger winds. There is a slight chance of light rain showers in far northwest California Friday night through early Sunday. More widespread light to briefly moderate precipitation is possible over mid and upper elevations across the entire region late Sunday and Monday, with lower elevations receiving scattered light amounts even as far south as the Bay Area. Far Northwest California may see 1-1.5 inches of rainfall from this system. Lower elevations in the south may only see a trace to 0.10 inches of rainfall. Snow levels could drop as low as 5000 feet in the north and 6000 feet in the south late Sunday and Monday. Spotty light rain showers will likely continue on Tuesday. Temperatures will be 8-12 degrees below normal Friday through Tuesday. High pressure will return Wednesday and Thursday and produce drier and warmer weather.

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA

Lingering subtropical moisture will generate isolated showers and thunderstorms again today. Yesterday, over 200 lightning strikes were recorded with scattered bands of wetting rain occurring in northern Ventura County, Eastern Kern County and the San Bernardino National Forest. Rainfall in these areas, in general, was 0.25 – 0.50" with the heaviest totals occurring in the southern San Bernardino National Forest into the Banning Pass. Today's thunderstorm activity will be much less widespread with most of the precipitation expected to remain in the Sierras and the eastern San Bernardino and Cleveland National Forests. High temperatures today will be 3-5 degrees cooler with afternoon temperatures ranging from the 70s at the coast to the lower 90s in the valleys. Winds will remain light. An approaching trough should push the moisture east of the area Friday and no further thunderstorm activity is expected. This trough will bring an increase in onshore flow over the weekend, leading to breezy conditions in a few areas. Expect afternoon winds of 15-25 mph Friday along the central coast in and near the Antelope Valley. This weekend, onshore flow will bring much cooler and more humid weather to the region. Expect highs to only reach the 70s to lower 80s in the valleys Saturday and Sunday with most areas seeing relative humidity (RH) minimums remaining above 20%. West afternoon winds of 20-30 mph can be expected in and near the Kern County Mountains, north Los Angeles County and the Banning Pass during the weekend. Additionally, expect northwest winds of 20-30 mph each afternoon along the central coast. This trough is expected to push into Northern California Sunday into Monday, leading to a chance for light precipitation in the Sierras, mainly from Fresno County northward. Scattered showers will be possible in the desert next Tuesday. The system will continue to push into the Rockies, which may lead to offshore winds next Wednesday or Thursday. Wind speeds are not expected to be strong during this offshore event. Temperatures will remain a few degrees below normal through next Tuesday before warmer weather returns for the second half of next week.
